AN INTERESTING SESSION IN BRUNSWICK.

Has Skipped the Course—The Sheriff Condemns the People.

Ga., April 30.—[Special.]—The head shooting and robbery subject of comment is to be remembered that it is the man who did it. The man who did it to the Danielsville man, who shifted the blame to the man who was shot, has provoked a new round of comment in the same paper.

The card says that the Moon's more trouble generally when in the county, and that Eldridge was a surprise and had skipped, and is still that he has done so, for robbing several stores.

Mark Moon, who was a convicted weapon, said John Moon deserved the school fund for any purpose the teachers were better paid.

Mr. Eldridge did play some one game, for Center, John Moon, Judge out of his mind, and did not play fair. Eldridge was going to Nesh-ridge left, Moorhead, and give him his "old man" hold him, and did Moon's pistol while Moon was all the more due that Eldridge was protection, and that he on the way he was and Moorhead fired Eldridge's arm. "Two Old Crones."

This funny comedy will close fittingly the theatrical season, with a good laugh, next Monday a matinee and night. The company and the play are better than ever. The Philadelphia Press thus noticed them: "This phenomenally great cast of comedians, with a great cast of comedians, and the great strength of this attraction, will again appear next week, presenting a new and larger, laughing public, a stronger than ever by reason of a new and more brilliant, cast, and popular songs, specialties, and scenes, and all elements of success and permanent popularity."

"The Fun begins with the rise of the curtain, and is a success without cessation, until the final grand chorus, which ends the play, after nearly three hours of continuous merriment. Beginning at a boarding school, continuing on a tour of Europe, and ending at a grand hotel, the comedy is unique, and introduced for the first time by the entire company to the best advantage, and the songs, glee, and dances are made the scenes of brightly light and picturesque. The comedians of the company are of great ability and are seen in characters which display their marked originality, singing, dancing, and acting, and the support of the entire company is one of the strongest organizations before the public, and the entire entertainment of the brightest, jolliest and most enjoyable presented in years."

The Night Session.

At tonight's session, the teachers got together on the institute question, and voted by a majority to adopt the council of education's recommendation that $1,000 be set aside from each county school fund to hold a teachers' institute there, then unanimously adopted the against a uniform series of shocks. The recommendation of the council that it was unwise to endorse the temperature recommended by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, was, on motion of Mr. Stewart, tabled until the next annual meeting.

Mr. Edgar Orr was then elected treasurer of the institute. The rest of the evening was up by the speeches of Governor Northern and State Superintendent Garrett, of Tennessee. The governor thought the best thing Dr. Garrett said was that each child was an accumulation of latent dormant power for good or evil.

Commissioner Bradwell had said that there were 600,000 children of school age in the state, and 200,000 of them were without educational facilities.

The governor advocated the establishment of normal schools by the state, and the holding of schools in every district. He said the best thing Judge Draper said was not a teacher in your public schools who don't love a child." The governor then reported on President Harrison's noticing the as he rode through the streets of Atlanta, and said it must be a good thing. A sympathetic picture was drawn of Jefferson Davis taking little confederates in his

"If great men love little children," said the governor, "ought not the teacher to love them?"

The valued the teachers' opinion more than any other class on education, and said that they are a delicate, and considered themselves, that he might go to the legislature. He advocated taxation for educational purposes, and made the statement that tax was another name for investment. He showed how tax as invested would be the use of real estate in a community, and that he would go to Chambersburg to see Dr. H. C. A Senseless Persecution.

The latest advices from Russia confirm the reports of the persecution of the Jewish inhabitants by the government.

In a few brief words in our telegraphic columns will be found a graphic description of the exodus from Moscow. The expelled Jews are chained wrist-to-wrist in gangs, and marched out of the city under guard. As soon as they are arrested the Russians plunder their houses and shops.

For no crime whatever these peaceful, industrious and thrifty people are driven from the homes of their childhood. They are robbed of their possessions, and manacled like felons. The old and the young, the strong man and the weak woman, are candidates for the speakership were members of the republican party, and he does not hesitate to employ the poor and clumsy art of downright slander in order to prejudice the democratic against a distinguished member of their party. Such doubtful tributes as a fool friend can pay to Mr. Mills, Whiskers Jones is paying him, and he is more than welcome to the benefits thereof.

It is said that many of these unfortunate are rushing to the priests for conversion and baptism, hoping thereby to save themselves from the wrath of the czar. This may be true. The instinct of self-preservation makes men do many hateful things, and no doubt there are some Jews who would pretend for a while to be Christians rather than lose property, liberty, and perhaps life itself.

The Christian world cannot be held guiltless, however, if it quietly looks on and permits these outrages. Europe and America should unite in a protest so emphatic that the czar will be compelled to respect it. The interests of humanity require our interference. If this persecution continues, where will it stop? It may lead to similar crusades against races and religions in other countries.

For this unprovoked crime Russia and the czar will not go unpunished. It will increase the spirit of lawlessness, and it will swell the ranks of the nihilists. It will make it impossible for Russia to borrow money, because the Jews control the finances of Europe. It will stir up everywhere intense anger against a government so unreasonable and oppressive.

It is a blunder and a crime, and the victims will not go unavenged.

Speculation in Food.

The advance in the price of wheat, corn, oats, etc., as The Philadelphia Times points out, is of more than doubtful benefit to our farmers.

Last year's crops are in the hands of speculators, and when the new crops are ready for market prices will be forced down, and the farmers will be compelled to take what they can get. Later, prices may be advanced again.

It is a bad state of affairs, but there is no remedy in sight just at present. Speculative combines and trusts have it in their power to buy crops at low prices and then advance the cost of food, including meat, to their own figures.

If this sort of thing is to go on the evil may become so oppressive that it will work its own cure. When the farmers and the masses generally see that the scheme is to juggle with the prices of the necessities of life in order to fill the pockets of the speculators and drain the pockets of the producers and consumers, and when they find no relief in legislation they will resort to any defensive and remedial methods that may seem most effective. In plain English, there will be trouble if this unscrupulous speculation in food is allowed to go on.

It is very easy for capitalists to say that the poor must accommodate themselves to the situation by purchasing less, but in a country like ours there are millions of people who would rather fight and die than live half fed and half clad. When men are in such a mood speculators should go slow, and statesmen should give the pressing economic problems of the day their best thought.

We have not yet come to the worst, but we are drifting in that direction, and without something in the shape of substantial economic reform the people will make the crushing and sometimes cruel force that goes with the supreme power of numbers.

What is a Billion Dollars?

The Mercantile and Financial Times has taken the trouble to give a detailed account of what is meant by the statement that the last congress expended $1,000,000,000. This is a round sum and a large one, but it is so easily said that the words which express it do not convey to the mind any adequate idea of the vastness of the amount. For this reason, The Times picks it to pieces and presents it in various lights.

Exclusive of interest—$1,000,000,000—the amount which the republican congress has expended, would give 5,451 families of four persons $70 a week for fifty years. If loaned out at 6 per cent it would give a return of $30,000,000 a year. One billion dollars in silver would weigh nearly 40,000,000 pounds.

houses children. It would pay for the education of 250,000 children from the kindergarten through college, and a city lot for 50,000,000 persons.

If a man with this immense sum desired to throw it away $1 at a time, he would be in trouble. His task would keep him busy for 428 years. If he were to attempt to burn $1,000,000,000 in paper money, $1 at a time, he would complete his task, by working night and day, at the end of 12,840 years.

These figures show what the Reed and Harrison congress has done for the tax-payers.

Fool Friends.

It is to be feared that Congressman Mills is not fortunate in some of his more active friends. This is not Mr. Mills's fault, but he will suffer the effects of it all the same. It is true that a man who aspires to public position can not get along very well without warm friends and strong friends, but many a man as able and as popular as Mr. Mills has been handicapped and crippled by the unnecessary partisanship of friends who have more enthusiasm than judgment, and Mr. Mills himself bids fair to be made the victim of the extreme folly of some of his followers.

We have already called his attention to the wounds that Whiskers Jones, of The St. Louis Republic, has been inflicting on him. The contest for the speakership of the next house is not to be between representatives of the two parties. It is a contest that is confined to the democratic party, and for that reason it should take the shape of friendly competition among those who aspire to the honor and dignity of the position. It is a contest that should be carried on in a decent and an orderly manner, and with due regard for the amenities that should exist between the members of a great organization.

This man's life and death show that, even in this world, the wicked sometimes suffer exceptional pains and penalties. Lopez was Maximilian's trusted friend at Queretaro. The young Mexican had been kindly treated, and the emperor was the god-father of his child. Without provocation, and solely for the sake of gain, Lopez, on the night of the 14th of May, 1867, gave the password to the troops of Juarez, and thus let them into the sleeping city of Queretaro. This base treachery caused the capture and death of Maximilian. The traitor received $30,000 in gold and the favor of the Juarez government. But his own wife deserted him. His children fled from him. A soldier slapped his face on parade. The vagrants in the street hissed him. The beggars refused to accept his charity, and cursed him.

For a quarter of a century this titled, decorated and gold-bought thing struggled to regain the respect of his own countrymen, but, despite his attempts to defend and explain his conduct, he continued to be shunned as something unutterably vile.

Even in his death he was disgraced. He did not die on the battlefield nor in the ordinary course of nature. It was reserved for a mad dog to be his executioner. Never was a traitor more horribly punished!

It is said that many of these unfortunates are rushing to the priests for conversion and baptism, hoping thereby to save themselves from the wrath of the czar. This may be true. The instinct of self-preservation makes men do many hateful things, and no doubt there are some Jews who would pretend for a while to be Christians rather than lose property, liberty, and perhaps life itself.

Better Than Pistols.

The affair of honor which recently occurred at Dalton, the details of which were printed in THE CONSTITUTION of yesterday, shows that common-sense methods are beginning to prevail among our young men, and we heartily commend the example thus set to the hot-blooded people who affect to believe that a resort to pistols and coffee scuffles anything or wipes out any stain.

Here were two young men in Dalton who had a grievance against each other. Instead of appealing to the code and getting into the wilderness of tangles and circumlocutions involved in a technical correspondence, which is almost as painful as the shooting to which it is supposed to lead, or not lead, as the case may be; instead of appealing to unlawful weapons and taking the risk of sending a human soul into eternity, these young men appealed to the arms that nature gave them. They went off to a quiet place and adjusted matters with their fists, after the most approved style. It was not a knock-down-and-drag-out affair, but was conducted in good order, if not in good taste. Several rounds were fought, and the set to continued until the principals were thoroughly satisfied.

It is a bad state of affairs, but there is no remedy in sight just at present. Speculative combines and trusts have it in their power to buy crops at low prices and then advance the cost of food, including meat, to their own figures.

It is very easy for capitalists to say that the poor must accommodate themselves to the situation by purchasing less, but in a country like ours there are millions of people who would rather fight and die than live half fed and half clad. When men are in such a mood speculators should go slow, and statesmen should give the pressing economic problems of the day their best thought.

We have not yet come to the worst, but we are drifting in that direction, and without something in the shape of substantial economic reform the people will make the crushing and sometimes cruel force that goes with the supreme power of numbers.

The Queen and the Cook.

The good people of the little French village where Queen Victoria is sojourning for her health are surprised to find that the old lady is in no way different from common mortals.

The former head cook of the queen lives near Grasse, and the other day he paid his old mistress a visit. The queen received him cordially, and, instead of making him keep his distance, invited him to sit by her side. The two conversed in a chattering way, and her majesty asked about Eliza and John and other friends in kitchen circles.

There is nothing surprising in all this. It is just what might have been expected. Queen Victoria knows where to draw the line. For instance, she drew it when she invited Charles Dickens to Windsor castle and made him understand that he was a gentleman, but as a private. Dickens would not have been surprised if he had lived to see it, but at the time he was.

What is a Billion Dollars?

The Mercantile and Financial Times has taken the trouble to give a detailed account of what is meant by the statement that the last congress expended $1,000,000,000. This is a round sum and a large one, but it is so easily said that the words which express it do not convey to the mind any adequate idea of the vastness of the amount. For this reason, The Times picks it to pieces and presents it in various lights.

The price and expense announcement of Edith Weston, of The Weyers Hippodrome, that the show would be a success, has been distributed to the press. The book will be sold by subscription only. Write for samples and agency contracts.

nothing to do with such a person.

The interview between these ancient chums must have been very touching. Doubtless, if she had her way, this wonderful cook would be knighted and decorated with stars and garters. And why not? The man who gives the world a new dish is a benefactor. Why not give him precedence over those who give the world new books and new islands? We cannot eat books and islands, but one sniff of dinner makes all the world kin. It strikes us that Victoria is a very sensible and practical woman.

The Fate of a Traitor.

A few days ago, when the wires brought the intelligence that Colonel Miguel Lopez, the betrayer of the Emperor Maximilian, had been bitten by a mad dog in the City of Mexico, we predicted his death. In a brief editorial on the subject we said:

What fate would be more fitting for this false friend, who is his benefactor? It is hard to believe that he will be cured. He will snap and snarl and foam at the mouth like a rabid bound.

He will rave in his paroxysms of medical frenzy.

He will tear his flesh in his mad convulsions, and die a wild beast.

It is rumored that Mr. A. L. Bransham, editor of The Home Tribune and the Atlanta News and Advertiser, will be saved from this humiliation.

White horses everywhere? In all that comes of drays and hacks, every horse and every man was white. A tap on the shoulder arranged him.

"Mr. Hardwick, I'm sorry!" It was the agent who spoke—"I'm sorry, but I could only get nineteen."

Sam jerked the telegram from his hand, but for a minute was speechless. Then without a word he handed a roll of bills to the man with whom he had bet.

The telegraph operator had made the "no" read "20."

Will Hays gets off some rough puns in his "Man About Town" in The Louisville Times.

Here's a sample about a man well known here:

An old darky, smoking a cob pipe, and carrying a catfish tied to a string, noticed an aged, portly-looking gentleman walking alongside of another less portly younger man. The old darky said:

"I am a man who is in the habit of running 'long roads.'

"I dunno who de ole rooster is, but 'de Wren' he's walkin' wid is de passingah' ticket agent on de E. T. V. and 'Georgie' railroads."

He then asked him if he had earthenware.

"I am a man who is in the habit of running 'long roads.'

"I dunno who de ole rooster is, but 'de Wren' he's walkin' wid is de passingah' ticket agent on de E. T. V. and 'Georgie' railroads."

Sam jerked the telegram from his hand, but for a minute was speechless. Then without a word he handed a roll of bills to the man with whom he had bet.

The telegraph operator had made the "no" read "20."

Who can blame the old darky?

Sam's face was a benign smile as he pushed one of the men aside, and pressing his face to the pane he said:

A STRANGE STORY

IN WHICH WEST END IS GREATLY AGITATED.

Mysterious Visitor Whose Presence Has Created a Great Sensation—A Series of Visits.

West End has a mystery. A mystery that grows darker and deeper; it puzzles the vigilant officers, mystifies the public and frightens the women and children.

Some time in January, near the middle of the month, at 9:30 o'clock—a bitter, cold night—two pistol shots in rapid succession disturbed the stillness of that usually quiet suburb.

So unusual a sound created excitement among the members of the council, who were holding a session in the city hall.

An investigation showed that the shots were fired by Mr. T. A. Hanbury to call the marshal and his assistants. The story he told was a peculiar one.

THE FIRST VISIT.

Mr. Hanbury had gone into the front yard to cover some shrubbery, that it might be better protected from the cold. She was standing several steps from the house, when a man stole stealthily through the front gate and up the walk between her and the house. When Mr. Hanbury turned and saw the man, she did what all women do under similar circumstances—screamed at the top of her voice. This immediately brought out Mr. Hanbury and his son.

As soon as Mrs. Hanbury cried out the man fled. The shots fired brought the marshal and others, and a long and diligent search was made for the intruder but without success.

Mrs. Hanbury described the man to be well dressed with the exception that he wore a summer suit and the weather was cold. He was rather tall, and was beardless save a black mustache.

After a few days had passed little was thought of this incident, but the stranger—

AGAIN AT MR. HANBURY'S.

Between two and three weeks after his first appearance Miss Hanbury, before closing the back door for the night, stepped out on the porch, to which it opens. She was astonished and frightened to see a man stooped almost to the ground endeavoring to remove a plank from the high fence which surrounds the enclosure, and to which there is no gate.

She immediately ran into the house and informed her father and brother. At first they were incredulous, but finally armed themselves and went into the yard.

It was not a trick of Miss Hanbury's imagination, for there was the man crouched to the ground, trying to effect an entrance into the yard.

Mr. Hanbury walked up to the fence and presented his pistol. The man arose without any apparent great haste and started away. Mr. Hanbury called on him to halt.

"Halt nothing," was his reply, and skirting through a vacant lot opposite and through the grounds of others he was soon concealed by the darkness.

Again the pistol was fired and again was heard. The man was not to be found. When standing near the fence either of the gentlemen could almost have touched the power had it not been for the high fence.

Either of the gentlemen could have put a bullet through the brains of the night rover who, for a second time, was caught prowling around their premises, but disliked to resort to such means.

By his dress and appearance the man was identified as the one who before came into Mr. Hanbury's yard.

AT MR. WILSON'S.

When about the same time had elapsed between the visits as before, the man, incognito, spoke or whatever he may be, was again seen, about the same hour of the night, as he had hitherto appeared. Miss Mamie Wilson, daughter of Mr. James Wilson, was seated in the library of her father's residence on Beacher street reading. She felt that peculiar sensation that warns of the steady gaze of human eyes. She turned to the window to find almost against that pale, hideous human face with glaring eyes fixed upon her.

Her father and brother were immediately informed, the officers called and for the third time search was instituted, but without result.

By this time the officers were thoroughly aroused and every effort was being made to discover who the strange man was who dared to roam around the private grounds of good citizens. Their efforts were futile, and the community was destined to be shocked beyond measure.

A GHASTLY VISIT.

Hardly had the number of days passed for the officers to be called for another search when exactly at 9:30 o'clock Miss Natalee Little, daughter of Mr. J. W. Little, who resides on Beacher street, just opposite Mr. Wilson, went to the back door to close it for the night, opening the door to peer out on the porch.

What was her horror to see a man stripped of all clothing standing just on the threshold. With a scream she fled fainting to the floor. For several minutes she did not recover sufficiently to inform her father and relatives the cause of her swoon. When she did, the marshal was sent for. He and his associates promptly responded, and every nook and corner of the town was searched, but the hideous human prowler could not be found.

The nocturnal visits of this ghastly creature were beginning to terrorize the town.

THE LAST VISIT.

Yet the grim, unwholesome visage of the mysterious man was again to be seen.

On last Tuesday night Mrs. W. S. Morgan was looking for visitors who would arrive in Atlanta in time to reach West End at about 9:30 o'clock. Mr. Morgan was out of the city, and she and her daughters were alone.

Between 9 and 10 o'clock a footstep was heard on the porch. One of the young ladies went to the door to meet the expected visitors. She opened the inside door, and there, standing against the wire screen, was the bear-eyed terror, perfectly nude with the exception of a pair of heavy brogans which encased his feet. The young lady slammed the door and cried for help, which brought her mother, sisters and little brother. The strange creature went slowly around the house, trying each window, and finally to the back door where on the porch he was heard to make a shuffling noise.

The ladies all the time were calling for help, and Mrs. Morgan, taking a pistol from the drawer, began firing it through the crevices of the door.

Two soldiers of their way to the barracks heard their cries for help and gave the alarm.

The marshal and other citizens were soon on the ground, and a thorough search of all the premises and the entire neighborhood revealed nothing.

Mrs. Morgan, all the young ladies and Master Morgan saw the uncanny visitor. A soldier who was behind the two, who gave the alarm, saw the shadow of a man as he crossed the street above.

Master Caldwell is determined to unravel the mystery, and the citizens of West End will welcome the day when this creature is behind the bars of an asylum or prison. The master is the talk of the town, but as far as can be learned, there is no man by which his identity can be determined.

WANTED IN SEDALIA.

J. L. DUNN, THE YOUNG MAN CONFINED AT THE STATION HOUSE.

Miss Helen Maurice, the New York Variety Actress, Is Supposed to Know More About Dunn Than She Told.

J. L. Dunn is wanted in Sedalia, Mo. Dunn is the young man who has been claiming the attention of the detective department since last Tuesday, when he was arrested at the Kimball house.

Notwithstanding his protests of innocence as a citizen of Austin, Tex., Dunn seems to all intents and purposes, a citizen of question able standing.

Yesterday Chief Detective Couch received a telegram from the authorities in Sedalia, SIDEWALK ORDINANCE.

IT STILL CONTINUES TO DRAW PERT KICKS FROM MERCHANTS.

Alderman Woodward Says He Is Not the Author of It, that the Board of Health Is Responsible for Its Creation.

The enforcement of the sidewalk obstruction ordinance is still creating talk.

Yesterday the sidewalks on the business streets were much of a Sunday appearance.

Of course the receiving and shipping of goods made it necessary for the merchants to use the sidewalks for their goods for a short while, but there was a noticeable absence of fruit stands and other goods usually displayed on the sidewalks.

The ordinance published in yesterday's Constitution was generally commented upon.

And just here it may be stated that the ordinance is not exactly new, nor is Alderman Woodward, the author of it.

The ordinance was introduced into the council by Alderman Woodward at the request of the board of health.

Several years ago the council passed an ordinance prohibiting merchants and others from blockading the sidewalks by putting out boxes and the like.

Soon after this the merchants presented a petition asking to be allowed to use two feet of the sidewalk next to their places of business, which was granted, and during his term as alderman Mr. Charles Collier introduced an ordinance prohibiting butchers from hanging meat over the sidewalks on evenings or other posts. This was done at the instance of the board of health.

This beef ordinance was not sufficient, and the board of health again took up the matter, which resulted in the production of the ordinance introduced by Mr. Woodward, and which is now creating the dissatisfaction among the merchants.

There is a rather remarkable feature in this ordinance, which is that by the enforcement of the recent enactment.

It is claimed that property owners or merchants who have rented out sidewalk space to fruit dealers, did so in violation of law, as they had no right to collect rent for sidewalk space, which is the city's property.

This fruit-stand business has been a source of contention between the property owners and the landlords, and it is rumored that the landlords who have collected such rents will either have to refund to their fruit-dealing tenants or answer to a lawsuit brought by the city.

"It is a hardship on us," said Mr. A. M. Shomo, yesterday. "We are compelled to leave our goods on the sidewalk in receiving and shipping, but, at the same time, I am not sure that the ordinance is not a good one."

Dunn still occupies lot No. 1 at the station house. He bears his confinement well, and talks in the most cheerful way about the charged against him.

He has sent and received a number of telegrams, one to a friend in Austin, Tex., directing him to sell some property which he claims to own there, in order that he may realize money to extricate himself from his troublesome situation.

Miss Helen Maurice, the pretty variety actress, who sailed under the name of Mrs. Dunn during her residence at the Kimball, has not been heard from since her departure Wednesday morning for New York.

She is suspected of knowing more of Dunn's transactions than she would intimate to the detectives, and it is quite probable that she may be brought back when the proper time arrives.

A PRETTY HOME WEDDING AT BALTIMORE PLACE YESTERDAY.

Other Society Events of Interest—A Wedding at the Central Presbyterian—Points About People You Know.

A very lovely home wedding occurred last evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Roberts, in the Baltimore block, when Miss Elizabeth Roberts was united to Mr. Carter Henry Page, Jr.

The ceremony was performed in the long drawing room. The mantel was richly adorned with palms and crimson roses, and between the deep windows at the end a beautiful bank of palms made a charming background for the wedding party. Four the windows, this end having three graceful ropes of similar, which, meeting in the center, were caught with a cluster of Marshal Niel roses; from the chandelier chandeliers depended a large ball of the same golden blossoms.

Beneath the smilax garlands two oxycy and gold tables were twined with smilax and contained crystal bowls of white roses and fire. Between these, the happy pair stood to plight their troth.

The bride entered with her maid of honor, little Miss Annie Pratt. The maid was an enchanting vision of fresh, youthful beauty in her graceful weddinings of China crepe made on the loom, with a lace back, and richly adorned with exquisite diamonds lace. The Medici collar was entirely of lace and full diamonds frills finished the softly wrinkled, long sleeves. The veil was caught with pearl pins; white slippers, gloves and a bouquet of bride roses finished the lovely toilet.

Miss Pratt wore a charming little short-waisted China silk gown, with short, full sleeves; the card-rose red.

The ceremony was eloquently performed by Rev. Dr. Barratt of the Presbyterian church.

After this, the guests were invited into the dining room, where delicious refreshments were beautifully served.

WONDERFUL WEDDING.

THE FATES WERE AGAINST A COUPLE AT ROCHELLE.

The Floor Gives Way During the Ceremony, a Child Falls in a Well, the House Takes Fire and the Horse Runs Away.

ROCHELLE, Ga., April 30.—[Special.]—The Recorder has learned of a marriage near Rochelle which was consummated under many difficulties.

The first accident happened as the justice and the groom were on their way to the house where the couple were to be united, when their buggy broke down. They soon remedied that, however, and reached their destination.

As they walked into the house the front porch gave way, and covered them beneath the debris. They were fished out by the bride and the wedding guests and made presentable for the marriage. While the ceremony was being performed and all were beginning to prepare congratulations, one of the children fell in the well, and, of course, all had to help pull it out.

After a time all were again ready, and this time the ceremony was finished and the couple pronounced man and wife. When they had received the best wishes of their numerous friends it was getting late and the newly married couple decided to make a start for their future home.

They had gone only a short distance when their vehicle gave out, the gentleman got down to mend the broken part and had just finished when the house in which they were married caught fire. He, of course, had to quit putting the fire out, and while absent his horse became frightened and ran away with his wife.

This seems enough for any one day, but there was still another incident in store for the happy (?) pair. After the husband had found his wife and horse and they were only a few miles from home, the horse stopped in the middle of a creek and refused to move. This made it necessary for the gentleman to get into the water and lead the horse out, but when reached the destination, at last, he was unable to assert that it will be a long time before they forgot their wedding day.

THE FRUIT HARVEST.

Captain Felix Corpuz Has Some Views on the Situation.

ROME, Ga., April 30.—[Special.]—The fruit of northwest Georgia will be limited. The luscious peach and juicy pear will hang on the branches almost alone in their rarity.

The frosts of March did their deadly work.
Plums suffered more than any other fruit, and peaches and pears faded badly.

Captain Felix Corpuz, who has the most extensive vineyards and orchards in this section, is of the opinion of the fruit outside.

"What will be your harvest this season, Captain?"

"Very limited indeed, sir," was the reply.
"In the valley I do not find as much injury to the crop as on the mountains. Perhaps I will make about one-fourth of a crop of peaches and pears in my valley, but not on the mountain hardly one-twelfth of a fair yield.
The cold weather killed the young fruit."

"Do you find the orchards around Cave Spring in a similar condition?"

"Well, I have not examined carefully. I know that my crop will be very poor."

Inquiry and observation disclosed the fact that the fruit located in the valley will be better than in other.

"But whenever you go you will find damage to the crop in general. The apple crop promises to be especially good and seems to have suffered least. The berry crop will also be very good."

Caught a Wild Turkey.

DAVISON, Ga., April 30.—[Special.]—Two little boys, sons of Dr. W. H. Hammon, of Orange, found some wild turkey tracks near the creek and concluded, more for sport than anything else, to make a trap or pen for his turkeyship. What was their surprise the next day to find a large gobbler in the trap. The turkey measured four feet eleven inches from tip to tip.

Killed Three Wild Turkeys.

TROTTON, Ga., April 30.—[Special.]—Charlie Jenkins killed three wild turkeys near Rock Springs last week. Two gobblers and one. The gobblers weighed twenty-two and twenty pounds after they were dressed.

The Hotel Would Not Pay.

THOMASVILLE, Ga., April 30.—[Special.]—The Gulf house, which has been under the management of Mr. Clegg since the beginning of the year, closed indefinitely this afternoon.
The house is and has always been very popular with commercial and railroadmen, and was the eating house of the Savannah, Florida and Western rail way, but the managers say that it has failed to pay. Mr. James Watt, the owner, was unable to say when it would again be opened. The situation is so deplorable that it will no doubt be opened again by new managers.

For the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

AUGUSTA, Ga., April 30.—[Special.]—The Georgia Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, in its annual meeting, elected President, Dr. H. C. King, for the ensuing year, and all the old officers. Judge George Hillyer, Judge John L. Hopkins, Judge Johnathan Norcross, Captain J. F. Burke, of Atlanta, are among the vice presidents. Hon.
William T. Gary is general counsel, and Samuel R. Craig secretary and treasurer. The Atlanta branch made a fine report through Secretary G. S. Panchon.

More Pensions for Widows.

SAUNDERSVILLE, Ga., April 29.—[Special.]— Ordinary Newman sent forty applications of widows for pensions to the executive department in Atlanta, thirty-nine of which were approved, and the following were rejected for want of information. It will doubtless also be approved as soon as the required information is furnished. This is a fine record for Major Newman, and shows how careful and painstaking he was in the preparation of the applications.
Twenty-two more applications will be forwarded to the executive department this week.

The Thirteen Rule Reversed.

ALPHARETTA, Ga., April 29.—[Special.]—About a month ago Mrs. Sallie Connaway sent to a neighbor and got thirteen duck eggs. She then "set" them under a hen, and about a week ago fourteen ducks hatched out.

A MISSING WIFE.

MRS. POTTS DISAPPEARS WITH HER TWO CHILDREN.

She Bought a Ticket for Chattanooga, but Did Not Say Goodbye—Her Husband
Will Go in Search of Her.

CALHOUN, Ga., May 30.—[Special.]—Mr. E.
Potts, a farmer who lives on Mr. J. B.
Fuller's place, near town, is looking for his wife, but it is not likely that he will find her in a hurry. She has covered her tracks well, and the recorder can only wonder where she is at present.

Grissom says that there has been trouble in the Potts household of late, and Friday evening there was a considerable racket between the husband and wife, and the former was the recipient of an extended explosion of feminine wrath.

Saturday morning Mrs. Potts sold a portion of bed clothing to some of her neighbors, and taking the small amount of money obtained, brought her two youngest children to town and purchased a ticket to Chattanooga.

Mr. Potts was away in the field at work, and knew nothing of his lady's departure until the Western and Atlantic train had already carried her and her children hence.

He was astonished to hear that his wife had left him, and is very much worried about her.
He says that he and his wife lived in peace together until a year or two ago. Since then she has often quarreled and threatened to run away, and once before had her clothes packed for that purpose. He believes she has gone from Chattanooga to Comanche county, Texas, and believes that somebody out there has induced her to desert him.

Mrs. Potts is about thirty-two years of age, and has been married to Mr. Potts about twenty years. She was formerly a Miss Woodley, of Murray county. She is the mother of four children, the oldest of whom is thirteen and the youngest three.

Her husband will endeavor to find her. He is very anxious on account of his children.

WORKING ON SUNDAY.

How a Farmer in Greene County Forget Himself.

GREENSBORO, Ga., April 30.—[Special.]—
They are telling a good joke on a prominent farmer living in the White Plains neighborhood in this county. Like other planters the wet weather of the early spring had thrown him behind with his crops. In order to catch up he was working from early morn until the sun was down. He became so eager and wrapped up in his work that the days of the week slipped by unnoticed and unnamed. He was making every moment count. The other Sunday he had his hands up bright and early, and they had been at work plowing for several hours when a friend chanced to ride by.
"Good day, John," said the friend, "what are you doing?"

"Plowing, of course. Terribly behind with my work and must catch up."

The friend was at first horror struck, for John had the reputation of being a good man, not exactly religious, but straightforward and a believer in keeping the Sabbath day holy. He was on the point of giving him a "bleeding out," when an idea seized him.

"Why, John, don't you know today is Sunday?"
he inquired.

The farmer's eye flew open and his mouth went down, while the terror depicted on his face was pitiful to behold.

"Goodness me!" he exclaimed. "What have I done?" He could not be unchained the miles and returned to his house. He spent the remainder of the day in sackcloth and ashes, and it makes him exceedingly sore to ask him the day of the week. He feels impelled that he will make no crop and he will attribute it to the quarter of a day's work on Sunday. It must be mentioned that he is now trying to further repeat by stopping work at noon on Saturday. He proposes to take no further chances.

AN OLD MADSTONE.

Which Was Hidden in One of the Houses of the First Settlers.

MONROE, Ga., April 30.—[Special.]—Mr. E.
A. McDowell, of this county, has placed a peculiar-looking stone on exhibition in the office of The Waller News. The history of this stone dates back a number of years. It is a genuine madstone, and the only one in the county.

A short time since Mr. McDowell was engaged to repair the residence of the late Mr.
Mack, deceased, of this county, the dwelling being now occupied by the second wife of Mr.
Mack. The house was a long structure, built by the late Mr. Mack, who was one of the first settlers of this county.

In ripping off the old strips of weather-boarding, Mr. McDowell noticed several odd things fall down from between the logs and the outer strips, and among them was a peculiar-looking little stone, about an inch and a quarter long and about half as wide, which had roundly turned at the sides and ends, about half as thick as it was broad. Noticing it was a perfect specimen.

This is the reverse of a madstone, in that the distance from the eye to the retina is too great. The rays do not focus on the retina, and thus the hypermetropic has blurred and indistinct vision.

IF YOU THINK

The proper state of mankind is man. If this be so, then it is not amiss to consider one of the most important parts to make up of a man, viz., his eyes.

The eye is curiously and wonderfully formed,
and is the most perfect optical contrivance.

It is apparently complicated, and yet it is simple.

It is strong, yet in a certain way delicate.

It is a mirror held out before the eye, and the assistance of glasses is required. Glasses are used mainly by persons for presbyopia or old sight as it is called.

It is called by some the eye of the body, and is used to correct the eye of the body, in time.

In young persons the ciliary muscle contracts and makes the crystalline lens more convex, but, as one grows older, the muscle loses its power, and it is necessary to apply convex glasses of proper strength to correct this deficiency.

A few of the other defects of vision are mentioned and illustrated below.

SHOWING A PERFECT EYE.

In the above illustration it will be seen that the emmetropic or perfectly formed eye is adjusted

so that the eye can see objects at a distance.

It is adjusted by the lens of the eye, which passes through the crystalline lens, and the other refractive media and focus exactly on the retina at the back of the eye.

It is frequently the case that, by reason of defective construction of the eye, the distance to the retina is too great or too small.

SOME CIVIL SUITS.

A BATCH OF DIFFERENT KINDS
FILED YESTERDAY.

There Will Be No Lack of Grist for the Mill of the Courts to Grind in Days to Come.

There were several suits filed in the clerk's office yesterday.

J. S. Wiggins sues the Central Railroad and Banking Company for $5,000 damages. He claims that he was running on the road as a postal clerk last winter, when his train collided with a freight train, caused by a misplaced switch, and that he sustained personal injuries that will incapacitate him for work during his whole life.

For False Imprisonment.

W. W. Furrow brings suit against Theodore F. Hall for $5,000 personal damages.

He claims that his character was damaged on account of his being arrested by Hall on a charge of cheating and swindling on Feb. 19, 1861.

The prosecution was abandoned, afterwards, and Furrow went free. He now wants damages for the injuries to his reputation.

Some Horse Suits.

Messrs. A. G. Anderson and D. G. Wyllie have brought suit against Mr. Elgin, for $2,000. They claim that he sold to him a two-year-old gelding, the trotting mare Minnie, in November last, and that he has failed to comply with the terms of the bargain. Therefore they sue for the amount agreed upon, with interest from date.

Mr. J. H. Felker sues Mr. L. Jones and L. F. Jones for $177. He claims to have purchased a mule from them, the trotting mare Minnie, all right, in March last. In April she began to show signs of sickness, and died shortly afterwards. He wants to recover on the ground that she was unsound at the time of the purchase.

Mr. C. P. Johnson sues for the recovery of a lot now in possession of Mr. D. P. Morris. The complainant claims that he has the property, and wants the lot, with $50 a year rental since 1858.

ANNA DICKINSON' HAMLET.

Scott Thornton Sued for Her Once, and Wants to Get Her to Support Him Now.

Scott Thornton, Atlanta's great tragedian, has upon a great idea.

His idea is to get Anna Dickinson, who has gained fame more often than one, to come to Atlanta and support him in "Romeo and Juliet," or some other such play.

"What do you think of it?" said he yesterday.

"What?"

"Why, getting Miss Anna Dickinson to come here with me."

"Yes; you know her, don't you?"

"By her rep—yes."

"Remember which she played Hamlet here? Now, well I mean to have her, and I've been thinking it would be a good idea to see if I couldn't get her to come down and help me out in a grand production of "Romeo and Juliet."

"What? she hasn't, has she?"

"Yes; she's in politics."

"What? is she a ward politician? That's a bad move, my d' boy. She ought to have stuck to the stage."

"Was she a good one?"

"Out of sight. She could easily discount any of our top men in my case."

"But you, too, she would draw well in the south on account of her po—"

"Political's got nothing to do with it. Why, Harrison was down here in the other day. Harrison and Dickinson in the same carriage with him. Just so she's got the brain, that's all right."

"But she has just been released from the asylum."

"That don't cut any figure, either. Guess she's all O. K. now. Don't affects my scheme at all. We'd pack the house for one performance here."

"I'm sure she's a good Hamlet here."

"As I remember she played it very well. She certainly had the intensity of feeling. No doubt about that my d' boy."

"She's got the brain, Romeo to her Juliet."

"Yes, but I'd have to have a good support—people properly dressed, and all that you know. She's a little too old for a Juliet, but she could make a good Hamlet."

"Wouldn't it be a good idea to get James Owen Connor too?"

"Excuse me, my d' boy. Insane asylum or no insane asylum, that's all right. But I don't play with any of your d' boy's chums. No, Sir!"

Scott Thornton has Miss Dickinson here, and will do his best for the opening of his new opera house.

It would certainly be a drawing card.

ANNA DICKINSON' HAMLET.

Scott Thornton Sued for Her Once, and Wants to Get Her to Support Him Now.

Scott Thornton, Atlanta's great tragedian, has upon a great idea.

His idea is to get Anna Dickinson, who has gained fame more often than one, to come to Atlanta and support him in "Romeo and Juliet," or some other such play.

"What do you think of it?" said he yesterday.

"What?"

"Why, getting Miss Anna Dickinson to come here with me."

"Yes; you know her, don't you?"

"By her rep—yes."

"Remember which she played Hamlet here? Now, well I mean to have her, and I've been thinking it would be a good idea to see if I couldn't get her to come down and help me out in a grand production of "Romeo and Juliet."

"What? she hasn't, has she?"

"Yes; she's in politics."

"What? is she a ward politician? That's a bad move, my d' boy. She ought to have stuck to the stage."

"Was she a good one?"

"Out of sight. She could easily discount any of our top men in my case."

"But you, too, she would draw well in the south on account of her po—"

"Political's got nothing to do with it. Why, Harrison was down here in the other day. Harrison and Dickinson in the same carriage with him. Just so she's got the brain, that's all right."

"But she has just been released from the asylum."

"That don't cut any figure, either. Guess she's all O. K. now. Don't affects my scheme at all. We'd pack the house for one performance here."

"I'm sure she's a good Hamlet here."

"As I remember she played it very well. She certainly had the intensity of feeling. No doubt about that my d' boy."

"She's got the brain, Romeo to her Juliet."

"Yes, but I'd have to have a good support—people properly dressed, and all that you know. She's a little too old for a Juliet, but she could make a good Hamlet."

"Wouldn't it be a good idea to get James Owen Connor too?"

"Excuse me, my d' boy. Insane asylum or no insane asylum, that's all right. But I don't play with any of your d' boy's chums. No, Sir!"

Scott Thornton has Miss Dickinson here, and will do his best for the opening of his new opera house.

It would certainly be a drawing card.
